Rod Enberg, Motley, named 'Regional Logger of the Year'

Forest Resources Association (FRA) and STIHL recently honored Enberg Logging LLC of Motley as the 2022 Lake States Region Outstanding Logger. Rod Enberg, owner of Enberg Logging LLC, was recognized Oct. 11, at FRA's Lake States Region (LSR) annual meeting in Stevens Point, Wisc.

Jim Hoppe, FRA LSR Chairman, presented Enberg with a plaque, a certificate for a new chainsaw and a $500 check from STIHL Inc., to recognize the achievement.

According to FRA, Enberg was very humble upon receiving the award. In addition to expressing his appreciation to FRA, Enberg recognized his employees. "I cannot say enough about my crew," Enberg said in accepting the Regional Logger of the Year. "Probably the most valuable thing you can do to be a successful logger is building a committed crew. For me, they are the guys that make this all work."

Ray Higgins of the Minnesota Timber Producers Association said, "Minnesota is blessed with many outstanding loggers and Rod Enberg is among the very best." Higgins went on to say, "He's not only shown leadership as president of our organization and of the Minnesota Logger Education Program, but he's also set an example of excellence in the woods, in working with private landowners and land managers, in his work in schools and school forests, and in working with policy makers in our state. Rod has spent a lifetime promoting forestry and logging in our state and I'm thrilled he's receiving the recognition he deserves for his efforts."

Rick Horton, with MN Forest Industries and the MN Sustainable Forestry Implementation Committee said, "Rod Enberg has spent his career managing MN forests for the many benefits they provide, he exemplifies everything that's right about logging in the state."

Tim O'Hara, FRA's Vice President, Government Affairs and Manager, Lake States Region, said "Rod Enberg is well deserving of the Lake States Region Outstanding Logger of the Year recognition." He noted that for more than 40 years, Enberg Logging has helped landowners manage their forestlands to improve forest health, wildlife habitat and generate revenue. Enberg Logging will now compete for the National Logger of the Year recognition.

The FRA represents the interests of nearly 350 organizations and businesses in the forest products industry. FRA members include forest landowners, suppliers, consuming mills, associated businesses and state forestry associations. FRA has member representation in 49 states and 377 congressional districts.

Mystery solved

Most Valuable Back and Jon Cameron was named as the most Improved.

Colleen (O'Keefe) Mayhew of Staples, a 1981 SHS grad, correctly identified all. She also clarified that 'Bo' Olson was actually Tom Olson. Chuck Martin of Staples, and fellow 1981 grad, correctly identified all as well, noting that Jon Cameron's nickname was 'Tyke.' Judy Wolak of Staples correctly identified Anglin, Tiegen and Cameron. She thought she recognized Mark Mickelson and David Lucas. Thanks for participating in our mystery photo.

'Fair game' is a moving target

One recent morning, during a very-much-welcomed spell of warm weather, I chose a deck chair instead of sitting before the fireplace for morning coffee. In the quiet of first light, I heard a faint chorus of honking coming from beyond the treetops. The first glimpse was only shapeless motion seen through a latticework of pine and oak branches, until the birds took shape as they cleared the trees and set their wings for the glide down to the still-gray surface of the lake.

My expectation was set for geese, given how numerous they are here at this time of year, when they move between the security of the lake and feeding grounds in nearby fields. I had heard only a few syllables of the birds' conversation before they emerged from the tree line, but should have recognized the few vocal clues as swan talk, not geese.

Unlike Canada geese, which are more common here—and sometimes encounter camouflaged hunters and goose decoys when they travel to nearby fields to feed—the nearly pure white and easily-identified swans have little to fear from hunters. That's because swans—tundra swans migrating through Minnesota, and the larger trumpeter swans that breed here—are fully protected.

The swans that had just touched down on the lake were unmistakably the huge, majestic trumpeters, the dead-giveaway being their call. It sounds very much like the bicycle horns of our youth, which were sounded by squeezing a round rubber chamber to force air through the horn's "trumpet." The first primitive automobile horns worked that way, too. Tundra swans, on the other hand, are slightly smaller, and more abundant continent-wide. They lack the longer, curved windpipe of the trumpeter, and as a consequence their vocals run more to high-pitched whistles or squeals. But when seen at a distance, they are difficult to distinguish one from the other.

The trumpeter swans that nest within Minnesota are a success story in wildlife restoration, after market hunting for food and feathers had eliminated the bird as a breeding species here by the late 19th century. It was reintroduced over a period from the mid-1960's through the mid-1980's, with captive birds as well as eggs hatched and reared for release, obtained from National Wildlife Refuges in Montana and South Dakota.

By 2015 there were an estimated 17,000 trumpeters in Minnesota, and now that number is thought to be nearly 30,000. Thanks to similar efforts by South Dakota, Iowa, Wisconsin, Michigan, Ohio, and Ontario, the mid-continent population of trumpeter swans in the central U.S. is estimated at nearly 65,000.

I also encounter swans where I hunt on a National Wildlife Refuge that was a site for some of the first efforts to reintroduce breeding trumpeters to Minnesota. Not more than a week ago, as I sat in my camouflaged boat looking out over my decoys, I heard that familiar trumpeting call behind me. Over a screen of cattails the sextet came into view, trumpeting loudly and not more than 15 yards away, and so large they looked like ponderous cargo planes.

They passed over my decoys and landed perhaps 75 yards away, then—calling and muttering constantly—gradually swam back in toward the decoys. No doubt they had seen the several swan decoys I use. I do this for the sake of their great visibility, to attract the attention of the passing ducks that are my intended customers. Among the six swans were two nearly pure white adults, and four of their young—cygnets, they're called—whose immature coloration can best be described as dirty gray.

Swans can be aggressively territorial during the breeding season, but are more gregarious during the fall migration. This group seemed intent on socializing with my decoys. Eventually—due to the cold shoulder my plastic decoys gave them, or sensing a human presence—they swam out toward the open lake, then launched into that foot-paddling, across-the-surface takeoff run that is needed to get their immense bodies airborne.

In Minnesota, swans are probably second only to loons when it comes to the reverence and protectiveness they evoke in people. Clearly, their absence for three quarters of a century before being restored as a resident waterfowl species has added to their charisma.

It may come as a surprise to some to learn that limited hunting of swans is allowed in 10 states, including North and South Dakota here in the Midwest, and in states in the West and along the Atlantic Seaboard. Most of these states issue limited harvest permits—"tags"—by lottery drawing. In those long-ago days when our wildlife was thought to be an inexhaustible natural resource, swans were prized table fare in 19th century restaurants that served wild game. They were the holiday centerpiece of feasts enjoyed by royalty in Europe and the British Isles. No surprise, then, that in our own time, some who have sampled them declare that "a swan is the best eating bird that flies."

In some cases today's harvest is driven by both the biological rationale for it—unchecked numbers of a species can damage their habitat's capacity to support them, and negatively impact other species—and to limit agricultural crop depredation. The latter has been true in places like North Carolina, where some farmers whose fields are grazed by wintering swans refer to them disparagingly as "sky carp."

The fact that there are different attitudes about the legitimacy of hunting and killing certain wild creatures—deciding what is "fair game"—is no great surprise. It's true not only with swans. Minnesotans and wilderness lovers elsewhere would never envision the killing of loons to be legitimate and acceptable. Yet loons were once shot and sold for the wild game markets, as well as by local custom, as questionable as it might seem to dine on a bird that eats little else but fish!

To those who grew up within the borders of towns and suburbs, the plaintive notes of the mourning dove are remembered as one of Nature's early morning wake-up calls. To a substantial number of Minnesotans, the mourning dove is considered a songbird, deserving to be off-limits to hunting. There was substantial hue-and-cry when the mourning dove was given game bird status in Minnesota in 2004, after being closed since 1946. Yet doves are the most widespread, abundant, and hunted gamebird in the nation. They are difficult to approach, quick to take flight, extremely fast and elusive on the wing, highly edible, and meet the standard of "game bird" more fully than some other game species whose status we would never question.

On the global stage there are still more examples. In some parts of Europe, the shooting and eating of larks—a songbird in anyone's bird guide—has been practiced for centuries. Then there is that "four and twenty blackbirds ... baked in a pie" of nursery rhyme. Yes, a real thing, though no longer commonly practiced in the British Isles.

All of which makes it clear that "fair game" has always been a moving target, shaped by custom, culture and conscience, and—hopefully not least, in our own time—informed by good sense and sound science.

Veterans looking for next career may find opportunities in rural communities

By Lori Schrader
Center For Rural Affairs

Transitioning from military to civilian life can be challenging for veterans. As they contemplate what's next on their career path, the answer may lie in a rural community.

Returning veterans are a perfect fit for the next generation of rural small business owners, farmers or ranchers. Some, however, face challenges, including difficulty accessing capital and acquiring training.

But with the help of programs offered by the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA), veterans can access the financial and educational resources they need to get ahead. Many programs also offer training and business planning support to help transfer skills developed in the military into a new career.

For aspiring business owners, USDA Rural Development offers more than 40 loan, grant, and technical assistance programs, including the Rural Microentrepreneur Assistance Program (RMAP).

A lifeline to small rural businesses nationwide, RMAP supports the development and ongoing success of rural microentrepreneurs and microenterprises. Direct loans and grants are provided to Microenterprise Development Organizations, such as the Center for Rural Affairs, which then provide loans and technical service to microentrepreneurs without access to traditional lenders. RMAP defines a microentrepreneur as a rural sole proprietorship or business with fewer than 10 employees.

For veterans interested in careers in agriculture and agribusiness, USDA's Farm Service Agency has programs that can provide financial, educational, and training resources, as well as business planning support. Loan programs are also available through the USDA Natural Resource Conservation Service, with preference given to veteran farmers who support conservation.

A large number of returning veterans have already transitioned into agriculture-related careers. As they prepare for the next step, these programs provide the much-needed financial and technical support.

In serving their country, our nation's veterans have shown determination and dedication. With the proper tools, they can show that same determination and dedication in helping build vibrant rural communities.

Quote of the week

"Elections belong to the people. It's their decision. If they decide to turn their back on the fire and burn their behinds, then they will just have to sit on their blisters."

Connecting to college through clubs, athletics and student life

By Mark Johnson
Interim Vice President of Academic and Student Affairs, Central Lakes College

Attending a community college was the best choice I've made. I'm a first-generation college graduate, so college seemed like a mysterious and complicated place to me. Luckily, my college provided me with an academic plan, so I knew which classes to take and when. And best of all, they connected me to so many out-of-class experiences, and I felt like I belonged to a community where others shared similar interests. I felt more engaged in my college experience, finished my degree, and have even returned to higher education as a career. I'm fortunate, now, at Central Lakes College to help build and support those kinds of experiences for our students, like student clubs, student life activities and athletics.

At CLC, we intentionally create these student experiences for a lot of reasons. First and foremost, we know these activities offer a sense of belonging and opportunity for engagement for our students. Once students engage, they connect to the college community and our resources. Studies have shown, just as my experiences have shown me, that students who feel connected are more likely to stay and complete their education.

Student clubs are a popular source of student activity on our campuses. We have clubs for just about anything. If you like it, we probably have a club for it, such as diversity, creative writing, audio recording, hip hop, e-sports, karate, and so many clubs from academic programs. If you don't see a club you're interested in, we can help you start your own!

CLC clubs are such a great leadership opportunity for students. Student clubs hold events, fundraisers, awareness campaigns, and make a difference in the community. The Psych Club, for example, hosted the Crisis Line and Referral Service on campus to raise awareness of their services. The Marine & Powersports Club, each year, hosts a drive for Coats for Kids, which helps get warm clothing in the hands of folks before the cold weather hits. Our American Sign Language club helped with a potluck to help students and our deaf community. Finally, our Heavy Equipment Program participated in Day of the Dozers, an opportunity to educate people about the construction industry and a fundraiser for the Children's Hospital.

If you want to see future leaders, look no further than the group of students who lead as a voice for their peers in the CLC Student Senate, which is located on both campuses. Students can find great leadership opportunities here. In fact, our Student Senate was recently recognized with LeadMN's 2022 Student Senate of the Year award.

Our Student Life program holds a lot of fun events on campus, too, like Halloween costume competitions, music concerts, and free food get-togethers. They host resource fairs, and they sponsor amazing trips to Minnesota Twins games or snow tubing at Mount Ski Gull. Student Life also uses its platform to promote important civic duties like voting.

If you love competitive athletics, CLC has the best athletics programs around. We offer football, baseball, softball, volleyball, and men's and women's basketball. We even just added a Trap Shooting team to Raider athletics. Even if you don't compete in these, attending the games and cheering for the Raider team is also a lot of fun!

All CLC students are welcome to use our newly renovated weight training and fitness room, as well as our yoga studio. Physical wellness is an important part of being successful in college, and we make sure students have the resources they need.

Like I said, I was lucky that I had access to experiences like these when I was in college, and I'm proud that CLC offers such extraordinary opportunities for student engagement, in addition to a top-notch, high-quality education. I encourage you to check out CLC in person. I'll see you on campus.

"The Problem of Thanksgiving"

Pastor Barry Klein, Staples Church of Christ

This devotion was almost entitled, "The Problem of God's Generosity," but it would have put the responsibility of the problem in the wrong place.

Jesus calls us to have "eyes to see and ears to hear" in Matthew 13:13-15. He is actually quoting Isaiah's reverse application when we don't perceive truth with our God-given eyes and ears. That quote moves into the phrase "understand with their heart." One Bible tool describes all of this as "having spiritual receptivity."

One person I know has been heard to say "the grasp of the obvious was missed." How do we miss the obvious? At best, it seems to happen when we just plain live life too quickly, too fast, too much in an overload mode. At worst, it happens in the midst of what the Bible describes as "hardness of heart." It is a spiritual condition of being separated from God, doing our own selfish thing.

It's rather ironic when we take something that's been given to us, but in turn, use it against the one who has given it to us. That is the earlier point of our Scripture above with the eyes and ears that God has given to us, but we in turn, use those two senses of seeing and hearing in ways that miss God or even rebel against Him.

God often ties together our love for Him with our love for one another. They aren't to be separated. Those two loves are a "hand in glove" design. Yet, we hear God call out our propensity to try to separate those two when He calls us back in I John 4:11, as we hear "Dear friends, since God so loved us, we also ought to love one another." Let's remember that true (agape) love will include forgiving one another. We can read more about that in Matthew 6:14-15; 18:21-35. As God has so generously loved and forgiven us, we do so then for others.

Our problem with "thankfulness" comes when we take too much for granted, especially when we try to figure life out apart from God. Oh, we even often think that we are on the right path when we live this way. But Proverbs 14:12 reminds us that "There is a way that seems right to people, but in the end, it leads to death."

Deuteronomy 8 is a fascinating "true-to-life" account in a study in human nature. God is talking with His people about their need to follow His life-giving commands and to also remember that He is the Source of all the generous good that He is sharing with them. But in our fast-paced living and even "hardness of heart," we tend to forget the One from Whom everything good comes from. In this Thanksgiving season, let's intentionally get back to using the eyes and ears that God has given us, in gratitude, to see and hear all that He is so generously giving us. It is all around us. All the time, in His lavish spiritual and physical world.

Lutefisk supper is back

Each year, Faith Lutheran Church hosts its lutefisk/meatball supper on election day. It was cancelled during the pandemic but came back in full force on Nov. 8.

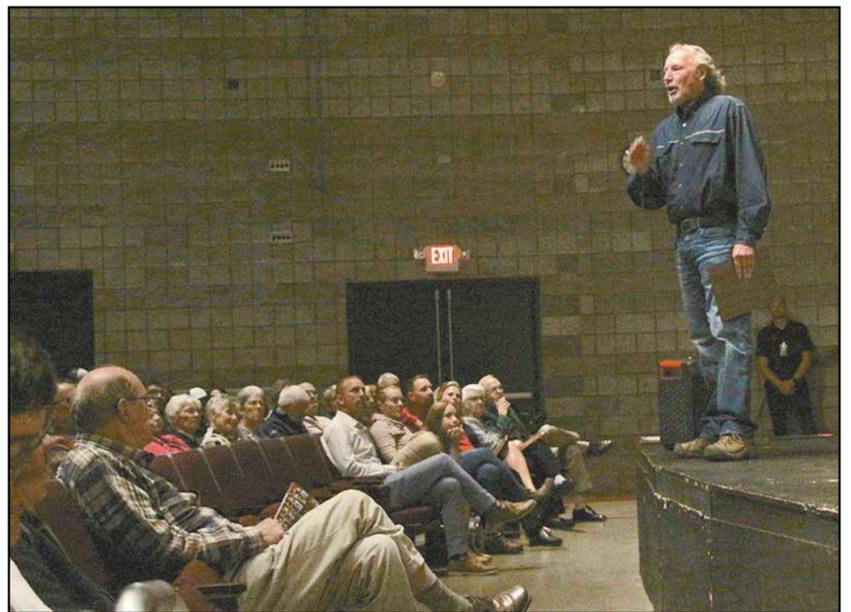

The main dishes are lutefisk, described as "the piece of cod which passes all understanding" and is served with melted butter or white gravy and Swedish meatballs with brown gravy. The side dishes include mashed potatoes, cole slaw, cranberries, pie and lefse as well as beverages.

This year, 250 tickets were presold and there were plenty of Scandinavians ready to snatch them up.

Many members at Faith are involved in this big project and they were on hand to peel potatoes, make pies, cook gravy and lutefisk, make meatballs and serve the meal.

A silent auction was also held, providing many delicious food items as well as antiques, handmade household and outdoor wares.

This event provides a chance for fellowship, not only in the preparations, but in the meal itself-folks come from miles away to feast on the lutefisk and visit with friends. A few may even come for the meatballs.

Lincoln's greatest sources of inspiration, Odell noted, were the Bible and Shakespeare plays. Odell mentioned one of his own mentors, fellow teacher Don Dravis, pointing to his friend's photo on the gymnasium wall. Odell also recognized Gene Mattila (below left), a former SMHS teacher and coach who was instrumental in helping make the Veterans Honor Flights to Washington D.C. a reality some years back.
